

Vacancy: Student Assistant

Erasmus School of Philosophy is looking for a student assistant to assist Yogi Hale Hendlin with his research within the Erasmus Initiative Dynamics of Inclusive Prosperity. Dr. Hendlin works at the intersection of environmental philosophy and public health policy, and is currently working on two books (one on industrial epidemics and the other on interspecies politics).

The successful applicant will have experience contributing substantially to academic conversations and performing serious academic research. This includes knowledge and intense interest in subject matter, familiarity with reference systems, emotional maturity, and practical experience. Background in empirical research, quantitative skills, and applied philosophy are a plus. Ability to figure out challenges and take charge of research assignments with strict deadlines is mandatory. Professionalism and accountability are a must.

Please visit Dr. Hendlin's institutional and personal websites to get an idea of the sorts of project and questions that the research assistant will be tasked with. The committed and perspicacious research assistant will also have opportunities to co-author with Dr. Hendlin.

Terms and conditions

The successful candidate is expected to start May 1, 2020. A one-year contract with Erasmus University will be offered. You will be appointed for 8 hours a week. Your working hours are flexible and your lectures and tutorials will be taken into account.

The following reward applies:

2nd year student: € 409,80

3rd year student: € 438,80

4th year student: € 478,00

Additional information can be received by contacting Yogi Hale Hendlin via e-mail: hendlin@esphil.eur.nl.

Applications

Please submit your application, including a CV and a motivation letter by e-mail to office@esphil.eur.nl no later than April 17. Please state clearly in the e-mail subject line that you are applying for the job as Student Assistant Research Support.